COMPLAINTS OF THE MOUTH.

Why They are Discontented With the Indian Schools in the East.

(Washington Post.)

The Sioux Indians are said to have had a rather turbulent interview with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs yesterday over the subject of Indian schools. Mr. Irvine

Miller, Secretary of the Sioux Commission, was at the National last evening, and said: "It is natural," said he, "that the Indians should be dissatisfied with the schools at Laramie and Carlisle. In the first place, from 50 to 75 per cent of the pupils at Carlisle and Hampton die within four years of their return home, die like sheep with the burial, principally from pulmonary consumption. The native parents object to the Eastern climate or to the enervating influence of closed houses after an outdoor life. It is related, it is not, by an Australian traveler that the natives go naked with a thermometer at zero, yet never suffer from lung diseases until they are induced to put on civilized clothing? It may be that going back to the native life and the rude tastes of their parents after the comforts of civilization is responsible, but the death rate is fearful and the Indians object to the Eastern schools.

"Another objection is urged that several years in the East teaches the young Indians to despise their kinsmen; to lose the natural pride in their own customs and to look upon whom they find on their return living in ignorance, squalor and wretchedness, and their education makes a gap which can not be bridged, while if the schools were the Agency the children would daily take home some evidence of civilization and a better mode of living, and lift their parents to a higher level of civilization."

"An old Indian expressed himself very poetically to the Indian Commissioner when speaking of the fogs which are frequent at Hampton. The breath of the spirit rises up and poisons our children," said he.

"The Sioux Commission favors the Agency school plan. And it seems to have the weight of argument on its side."

GENERAL WALLACE'S DOUBLE.

He Appears in Washington and Makes

Trouble at the Hotel.

(Washington Post.)

To the many friends of General Lew Wallace who were led to believe by a paragraph in the Sunday Post that the distinguished General was in Washington, on a mission extended. It was a simple enough paragraph, no particular point to it, no news of importance, just the passage of a few words to tell the statement that Lew Wallace was in town, but a hundred people have forced the patient clerk at the Ebbitt to explain that it was a mistake, that Lew Wallace was not in town, but that he was in Washington, on a mission extended.

It came about this way: The writer of the paragraph walked into the Ebbitt Saturday night in his inebriated and inebriated and General Lew Wallace sitting on a settee. He knows the General. He has met and interviewed him not less than a dozen times in the last four years. He knows him by sight, speech, and manner. And he asked the clerk if it was not Lew Wallace, and the clerk looked and said yes. So the reporter walked over, and, after a minute and walked away. To his intense surprise, chagrin and astonishment, he learned the following day that he had been deceived. It was not Lew Wallace, but a man who had been mistaken for him. It was not Lew

Wallace, but a man who had been mistaken for him. It was not Lew Wallace, but a man who had been mistaken for him. It

Wallace, but a man who had been mistaken

man who had been mistaken for him. It

Wallace, but a man who had been mistaken

man who had been mistaken for him. It

Wallace, but a man who had been mistaken

The Heart's Answer.

In this deep hush and quiet of my soul,

I hear my heart like a bell that rings its daily toll; when my weary day

Reigns its functions, and, without control

Of self, it beats its own mad, mad

Rhythm in purity, to make survey

Of those poor deeds that wear my days away;

When in my heart I hear the distant toll

Of bells that murmur of my coming knell,

Exchange in a sigh a slow and heavy

Life, and I feel a heart that is not

My own, a heart that is not mine, a heart

That is not mine, a heart that is not
